

NATIONAL WHIG.

"Although myself a WHIG, yet I had the power to make a President of the United States, and if I knew who, in the high office of President, would administer the government in the greatest purity and do most towards restoring it to what it was in the earlier days of the Republic, I would make that man President, no matter to what party he might nominally belong.—Gen. Taylor to Hon. William Greaves.

THE POOR MAN.

BY ISAAC A. POOL.

His hands are rough, his coat is torn,
His frame with labor sore is worn,
His heart with sorrow sad,
His lonely but not cold,
His children suffering with cold,
And naught to make them glad.

At times it rains, and hails, and snows,
And rude around his shivering blows,
Stern winter's piercing blast,
The fire on his hearth is low,
And want of wood must keep it so, Long as the cold shall last.

And hunger, with a horrid stare,
Looks in and reigns with terror there,
Amidst the suffering poor,
Whist happier men, in fortune's tide,
In gold and silver daily ride,
Triumphant past their door.

In humble suppliant pray'r they kneel,
And incoherent words they feel Will up to God ascend,
For He who guards the sparrow's fall,
Will keep his faithful children all,
And be the poor man's friend.

His wife, sweet partner of his woes,
Around her suffering children throws
A flimsy, threadbare cloak,
And crouching low upon the floor,
They wish the dreary winter o'er,
Or death's relieving stroke.

Then when winter's chilling blast,
And storms and cold are safely past,
Their sufferings cannot cease;
For still the cold seasons bring Fresh terror, from their tyrant king,
In all save a release.

This is his hardy task of pain,
To work and sweat and not complain,
From dreary morn till night;
Aye, still on from day to day,
Even though his life-blood ebb away,
And heaven shut out his light.

For on his hands the lives of all His loved ones rest, and if they call On him for bread and vain,
In helplessness his heart must bleed
With sorrow for their want and need,
Better to work in pain.

Each day's return will bring its want,
Which his poor earnings scarce can scant
To meet; but there's a hope
For him laid up in heaven above,
That God will in his holiest love Give Pleasure's wings full scope.

And, when his soul departs in bliss, Dying, he doth bequeath them this—
A better gift for me
Than all the sums of worthless gold
That the vain miser's coffers hold—A life of poverty!

They know that their "Redeemer lives,"
And in his tender mercy gives A home beyond the grave,
Where money from want and pain are free, Yet still to keep them humble, He His loved ones will chastise.

But they in heaven lay up their store,
Where sorrow can molest no more,
And pain can never come,
Where rest comes to the weary soul,
And ceaseless joys around them roll—
This is the poor man's home!

Irish Hearts.

At this moment, when the sufferings of the Irish people engross so large a share of public sympathy, the following sketch of Irish character may not be found uninteresting.
To us it seems touching and truthful.
The story tells of a family, of a husband, wife and several children, on one of our lake steamers. They were in great destination; and the beauty of the children was the theme for the admiration of all their fellow travellers. At the request of a lady passenger, who having no children of her own, was desirous of taking one of the little children and adopting it, the narrator addressed himself to the head of the family.
We do not know the author of the sketch, and give it as we find it.

"Although," says the story teller, I had considerable doubts as to the results. "I offered my services as a negotiator, and proceeded immediately upon my delicate diplomacy. Finding my friend on deck, I thus opened the affair.

"You are very poor?"
"His answer was characteristic—
"Poor, sir," said he; "if there's a poorer man than me wouldn't the world God pity both of us, for we'd about equal."

"Then how do you manage to support your children?"
"It is too sudden; he turned sharply round.

"A what sir," he cried, "a relief to part from me child? Would it be a relief to have the hands chopped from my body, or the heart torn out of my breast? A relief indeed?—God be good to us, what do you mean?"

"You don't understand me," I replied,
"if now it were in one's power to provide comfortably for one of your children; would you stand in the way of its interest?"

"No sir," said he; "the heavens know that I would willingly cut the sunshine away from myself, that they might get all the warmth of it; but do tell us what you are driving at."

I then told him that a lady had taken a fancy to one of his children; and if he would consent to it, it should be educated and finally settled comfortably in life.

"This threw him in a fit of gratulation.— He scratched his head and looked the very picture of bewilderment. The struggle between a father's love, and a child's interest was evident and touching; at length he said:

"Oh, mother, wouldn't it be a great thing for the baby? But must I go and have a talk with Mary—that's the mother of them and it wouldn't be right to be giving away her children after her face; she knows nothing at all about it."

"Away with you then," said I, "and bring me an answer back as soon as possible."

In about an hour he returned leading two of his children. His eyes were red and swollen, and his face pale from excitement and agitation.

"Well," I enquired, "what success?"
"Bedad, it was a hard struggle, sir," said he, "but I've been talking to Mary; and she says as it's for the child's good, may be the heaven's above will give us strength to bear it."

"Very well, and which of them is it to be?"
"Faix an' I don't know, sir," and he run his eye dubiously over both. "Here's Nora—she's the oldest; no' want her mother's so much—but can't tell 'em a' righer —it's myself that can't tell 'em a' righer —part with least; so take the first that comes wid a blessing." There sir," and he handed over little Nora—turning back he snatched her up in his arms and gave her one long hearty father's kiss, saying through his tears—

"May God be good to him that's good to you, and them that offers you hurt or harm, may their souls never see St. Peter."

Then taking his child by the hand, he walked away leaving Nora with me.

I took her down in the cabin, and we thought the matter settled. It must be confessed, to my great indignation, however, in about an hour's time I saw my friend Pat at the window. As soon as he caught my eye he commenced making signs for me to come out. I did so—and found he had the other child in his arms.

"What's the matter now," said I.
"Well, sir," said he, "I ax your pardon for troubling you about so foolish a thing as a child or two, but we were thinkin' that may be it'd make no differ—you see, sir I've been talkin' to Mary, an' she says she can't part with Nora, because—the creature has a look o' me—but here's little Biddy, she's pookier far, an' av you please, sir will you swap?"

"Certainly," said I, "whenever you like."

So he snatched up little Nora as though it were some treasured treasure, and darted away with her, leaving little Biddy who remained with us all night; but lo! the moment when we entered the cabin in the morning, there was Pat making mysterious signs again at the window, and by this time he had the youngest, a baby in his arms.

"What's wrong now," I enquired.
"Be the hokey fly, sir an' it's myself that's almost ashamed to tell you. You see I've been talkin' to Mary, and she didn't like to part with Nora, because she had a look o' me, and be me soul, I can't afford to part with Biddy, because she's the model of her mother, but there's little Pauden, sir—

There's a lump of a Christian for you, two years old, and not a day more—he'll never be any trouble to any one, for av he takes after his mother, he'll have the brightest eye, and av he takes after his father, he'll have a fine broad pair of shoulders to push his way through the world. Will you swap, sir?"

"With all my heart," said I, "it's all the same to me"—and so little Pauden was left with us.

"Ah, ah," said I to myself, as I looked into his big laughing eyes, "the affair is settled at last; but it wasn't, for ten minutes had scarcely elapsed when Pat rushed into the cabin without sign or ceremony, and snatching up the baby in his arms, cried out:—

"It's no use, I've been talkin' to Mary, an' we can't do it. Look at him, sir—he's the youngest and best of the batch. You wouldn't have the heart to keep him from us. You see, sir, Nora has a look o' me and Biddy has a look o' Mary; but be my soul, little Biddy av both of us all over. No sir nor, we can bear bad fortune starvation, and misery but we can't bear to part with our children unless it be the will of Heaven to take them from us."

THE WASHINGTON CITY CIRCULAT-ING MUSICAL LIBRARY.—Messrs. Geo.
Anderson intend opening the above named Musical Library as soon as a sufficient number of subscribers shall have been obtained to justify the carrying the same into effect. It has been approved by many, as it will afford an opportunity to the lovers of music and singing, to have at their disposal the most valuable and useful music, and at a small expense.
The Library will be furnished with the standard and new music, comprising opera music, songs, duets, waltzes, &c.
For terms, apply at my Music and Stationery Store, where the Library will be established.
Penn. Avenue between 11th and 12th sts.

WATERLY HOUSE.
THE Subscriber would inform his friends and the public generally, that he has opened a RESTAURANT and BAKERY, at the above name, on 8th street, a few doors south of Penn. Avenue, where he will be happy to entertain them in a manner that he hopes will be satisfactory. His BAR will be furnished with liquors of the best and most approved brands, and the Eating Department will always contain every delicacy in season. He hopes to receive a patronage of the patronage of his friends, while he endeavors to cater for
